The world is not just a set of problems.

The world is a pretty beautiful place, and The Monitor tries to convey all of that... We’re not going to ignore the problem but we don’t report it in graphic detail. We report enough of it for you to know what it is, and then we try to go beyond that. We try to look for solutions. We try to seek the people who are trying to solve the problem or look for that little glimmer of humanity, even in a terrible situation, and you know, it’s almost always there. Monitor reporters will tell you that they can find it if they look long enough, and that’s one of The Monitor’s missions in its next century.

— Marshall Ingwerson

The Christian Science Monitor’s thoughtful, constructive reporting covers:

International News • US News & Politics
Innovation • Environment • Money
Books • Arts & Culture • Home Forum

Brand
The Christian Science Monitor

What it is an international online and print news organization with 19 bureaus worldwide

What it isn’t a religious publication

What it’s doing improving the world by uncovering good everywhere

Impact
winner of 7 Pulitzer prizes and 14 Overseas Press Awards

Reach
C-level executives, senior policy makers, managers, professionals and the head of local PTAs

Heritage
founded in 1908 to provide fair, balanced news in response to the “yellow” journalism of the day